Elections to be battleground of moderate and Christian fundamentalist views

by Lindy Magner

This election year, the political landscape is different from past years, as groups crop up to defend what they see as a concerted effort by ultra-conservatives to seek seats from local school boards to the state assembly.

"We want to alert the people of San Diego County that there is a threat posed by far right groups which are making it their goal to seek seats on every school board, city council and planning board," said Michael Parrish, chairman of the Community Coalition Network (CCN), a political action committee formed last year to endorse moderate candidates and oppose those with ultra-conservative views.

"We organized last summer in response to the success of the Christian right in 1990 to win a number of school board seats," said Parrish, a former Encinitas school board member and UCSD professor.

"We are watching every school district carefully - in no district is there yet a majority of the Christian right," he said, noting that two boards - La Mesa-Spring Valley and Oceanside - now have two fundamentalists seated and could get the majority on the five-seat boards this November.

According to Don Smith, co-chairman of the San Diego chapter of the Christian Coalition, his organization is being "painted by some as being extremists out in right field somewhere."

"I wasn't aware there were any far-right candidates running - our people are basically representative of mainstream America," quipped Smith, one of two Christian right candidates winning seats on the La Mesa-Spring Valley Board of Education in November 1990.

"Definitely, we'd like to see people who share our conservative views on school boards. Countywide, we don't have as many people running this year as we'd like for school boards and other public offices," he said.

The Christian Coalition, founded by evangelist Pat Robertson, favors prayer in public schools and opposes government-sponsored school lunch and breakfast programs. The writings of Robertson call for the eradication of the current public education system.

Smith stated that his coalition is not associated with Citizens for Excellence in Education, a fundamentalist group whose agenda includes banning books such as "Little Red Riding Hood" as well as advocating prayer and the teaching of creationism in schools, according to a recent Wall Street Journal article.

"We do share some of their values," said Smith stating that he favors creationism taught as one theory of evolution, noting that recent court decisions favor balanced approaches which include creationism as one theory of man's development.

As for book-banning, Smith stated that his group is not for "censorship" but favors the "wise selection of material."

GTM planning fall move to larger Broadway location

GTM Wholesale Liquidators will soon be making a move which will solve an ongoing parking problem at their current Broadway location and allow for the expansion of some of its departments.

For $1.5 million, the retailer which specializes in closed-out products recently purchased the San Lorenzo Nursery Company building at Broadway/Olive which it will occupy in mid-October, according to Dick Wahlstrom, vice president of the Santee-based company.

"We sell everything from crystal to office supplies," he said.

According to Wahlstrom, though GTM management was not actively looking for another location, they "jumped right away" when 13,700-square feet of space in the 40,000-square foot building became available. The remaining footage will continue to be leased to Cloth World.

"Our number one consideration was parking - we didn't have ample spaces for our customers. And, we needed more room for displays and for expansion of our furniture and clothing departments. Basically, we just outgrew the building," he said of the space first leased four years ago.

GTM formed as a corporation in 1982, opening its first of three stores two years later.

The bigger store may mean a "slight increase" in staff, but Wahlstrom isn't sure yet if that will translate into one or two new positions.

GTM will be moving to their new building at Olive and Broadway as soon as renovations are completed.

LG District begins home-school program

by Lindy Magner

Being taught the ABCs at home doesn't have to spell isolation for students and their parent-teachers from standard school curriculum or resources such as computer labs.

Beginning this fall, the Lemon Grove School District will follow the lead of other districts and the county Office of Education in setting up a center to assist parents who teach their children at home.

According to Dr. Connie Fish, the district's assistant superintendent of instruction, the district will begin this fall a home-school program similar to the county office's program which offers instructional material and other services to about 500 parents who are schooling their kindergarten through eighth-grade children at home.

"About 16 Lemon Grove students participated in the county's program last year; we decided that since the numbers are now high enough to justify starting our own program, so we're hiring a half-time teacher and putting a portable classroom on Madera Street (at San Altos School)," stated Fish.

"It used to be that districts would lose contact with parents who opted to teach their kids at home, so that when they decided to put them into the school system, there were problems," she said.

The center will provide parents with instructional materials as well as give students access to a computer lab and even offer field trips.

"This will be a joint relationship between the district and the home-taught students," said Fish, who has been brainstorming with other school districts in developing this program.

According to Jim Davis of the County Office of Education, the county's home-school program has grown steadily since it began seven years ago, from 50 to 500 students.

"We try to encourage districts to start their own programs when their population gets large enough, and share our knowledge with them," he said, explaining that districts can share as many of their school facilities with the home-taught students as they wish, including physical education instruction and access to athletic equipment.

He added that the financial benefits to districts is a compelling impetus for districts to begin their own programs, since they can collect state ADA funds for home-taught students.

According to Davis, a district teacher may be trained in the county's home-school program or the district can contract with the county for one of its 15 instructors.

Though more and more school districts are beginning their own assistance programs - two districts will begin pilot program this fall, and another two will begin their own full-fledged programs - Davis states that the county is not seeing a decrease in the number of parents it serves.

"It seems that for every district which pulls out, more and more parents come out of the woodwork who are dissatisfied with public schools and think they can do it better."

He explained that families desiring to teach at home either first go through a screening process with the county or appropriate district to determine the feasibility of such an undertaking, or file an affidavit with the state which establishes their home as a private school.

"If they don't contact us or the district, they're left to their own devices for instructional material and developing teaching strategies," said Davis, who adds that it is preferable that parents tie into a home-school program.

"At some point, these parents are going to be enrolling their kids in public school; most parents just aren't equipped to teach higher math or science, or other languages," said Davis.

Senate Youth scholarship offered

State Superintendent of Public Instruction Bill Honig recently announced an opportunity for high-school juniors and seniors who hold student elective offices (in public or private high schools) to receive a $2,000 scholarship and a trip to Washington, D.C. in 1992-93.

The scholarship and trip are part of the United States Senate Youth Program, designed to honor outstanding student leadership, community involvement, and high academic achievement.

This program, established in 1962 by Senate Resolution 324 and funded through the William Randolph Hearst Foundation, provides scholarships for two high-school juniors or seniors from each of the 50 states, the District of Columbia, and the Department of Defense Overseas Dependent Schools. The delegates will visit Washington, D.C., January 30 through February 6, 1993, for an "insiders" view of the United States government, particularly the Senate.

Interested and eligible students are nominated by school principals who will receive application information through their district offices by the end of August. Each high school, with the help of a local selection committee, identifies one candidate to represent the school. The school principal must submit the nominee's application to the California Department of Education, postmarked no later than October 9, 1992.

The statewide screening of applicants will occur in October. Two delegates and two alternates for California will be selected by Superintendent Honig. Announcement of the winners will be made by the U.S. Senate Advisory Committee in cooperation with the William Randolph Hearst Foundation in December.

The State Board of Education will honor the outstanding leadership of the two Senate Youth Program winners, along with that of the two alternates at its meeting on January 8, 1993, in Sacramento.

For more information regarding the U.S. Senate Youth Program, contact Dr. Ira Clark of the Department's History-Social Science Unit at 916/657-3371. Those seeking information regarding applications should contact their local high school principal.

Survival

A new wrinkle has been proposed in Sacramento that, in my mind is totally illegal, and certainly meant to divert attention from the state's absconding with funds that are rightfully the property of the cities. It will, if enacted, pit one city department against another for survival.

The scheme is called SB 1280 and it intends to authorize a city to use 20 percent of the TDA (Transportation Development Act) funds that are accrued each year, for general fund purposes. In so doing, apparently the state is looking to make their invasion of city revenues less painful by allowing a "rob Peter to pay Paul" option at budget time.

The TDA funds, which are derived from 1/4 percent of our sales tax that was approved by the voters back in 1971 to pay for public transit purposes. These are the funds that MTDB uses to provide for the Dial-A-Ride service in Lemon Grove, plus two fixed San Diego Transit routes through our town, and one county bus route. The yearly allocation for Lemon Grove is roughly $400,000, with a small contingency reserve.

A 20-percent reduction of these funds would mean an $80,000 cut in these meager services for the transit-riding residents of our city. Even though those funds would be used in Lemon Grove for other departments, the cuts would drastically reduce what is a marginal service, at best.

In the first place, it is just incomprehensible to me to believe that such an act is possible. It would be totally opposite to what the voters authorized with the local option sales tax (SB 325 in 1971) and the bond acts 108/111 and 116. Such a break in faith would solidify the feeling that Sacramento has little regard for the people and considers themselves immune to reasonable and responsible accountability for their acts.

To my knowledge, all other cities and the county are very much opposed to this sneaky trick. The little benefit of flexibility with their own money will probably cause more trouble than it would be worth. I can see only more bickering in-house between departments and special interests over a sum that is really too small to really help any at all if diverted.

In Lemon Grove that is certainly true, and the results would seriously cripple our meager public transit service. Other jurisdictions, though they may be larger, are proportionately in the same boat, and we all see through the scam that is being perpetrated upon us.

It is time for everyone to forget partisanship and turn to in salvaging a sinking ship. The time of unlimited prosperity for California, and America as well, has passed and we are all faced with a belt-tightening future. The problem is that most everyone realizes this fact except our "leaders" in the State capital. They still are playing with smoke and mirrors while the rest of us are biting the bullet. I believe that we might even happily chew the cartridge if we knew that they were really doing the same. A 10-percent cut across the board would convince me. If salaries, staff, travel, per diem, car allowance, mailing, and utilities were arbitrarily cut by that amount, it would make a big difference. It would also restore confidence in our government.

SB 1280 is doing just the opposite and is showing the true colors of those who have obscene levels of control over our fiscal lives here in Lemon Grove.

"There's a lot of trash out there, and there is uplifting material as well," he said.

He further stated that the Christian Coalition supports a "conservative core set of values," favoring more religion and less bureaucracy.

"We don't believe in social programs or in a welfare state; government support of such programs results in excessive taxation which in turn requires both parents to work to financially get by, which then destroys the family structures," said Smith, adding that aiding needy families and students should be done outside the governmental framework.

Smith stated that his coalition provides information and training for those wishing to run for school boards and other offices, noting that various conservative groups such as his and the Pro-Life Council are now in the process of developing a platform for public release.

In the November elections, coalition-trained candidates include Richard Shult, the chairman of the coalition's South Bay chapter; Sylvia Sera Sullivan, Jim Deyling and Tami Scott for the La Mesa-Spring Valley School District, said Smith.

Though the Christian Coalition is guided by its set of religious values, not all clergy wish to have its specific agenda affect the policies of public schools.

According to Parrish, his opposition group is "endorsed" by the San Diego Ecumenical Conference, and some local clergy such as Ed and Joan Pettis, co-pastors at Lemon Grove Congregational United Church of Christ, participated in pre-primary election events held in May.

"The Christian right is doing one heck of a job trying to get on every board possible and are targeting the public schools. We strongly believe in public education for any kid. Jesus told us to love others and feed the hungry, not to make decisions for everyone," said Rev. Joan Pettis.

"People need to be aware of what each candidate stands for - candidates don't always say where they are coming from," she added. Though she will not literally preach to her congregation about the issue, Pettis will make a variety of literature on candidates' platforms available at the church.

Parrish explained that his organization will be conducting surveys of the candidates which will determine candidates CCN will support and which it will oppose. Though it will provide some advertising aid for selected candidates, the political action group will be relying on grassroots efforts in various districts for the actual door-to-door and telephone campaigning.

One such grassroots group is the Community for Responsible Education which was formed by some in the La Mesa-Spring Valley School District shortly after the 1990 elections to "monitor" the Christian right. With the upcoming election, that group is gearing up a campaign to promote three moderate candidates for that board's three open seats.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

A startling and grimly repugnant hate crime occurred in a neighboring community last week. A synagogue in the San Carlos area was defiled by a massive assault of anti-Semitic graffiti. Attacks on synagogues are nothing new in this country, but given the tenor of the times, it resonates most ominously.

The frequency of hate crimes is rising again, and it is a time when those who see no crime in diversity must stand and be counted. The target of hate crimes is constantly changing and it is all too easy for those who defend one target to relax and even find relief when the hater switches to a different target. For example, it would seem that the haters recent concentration on the gay community has given a partial respite to targeted ethnic groups and bred a false notion of harmonic progress.

This is deceiving; the hater is insatiable in his search for targets for his rage and venom. He seizes upon hard times such as this to find old and new scapegoats upon which a tense and frustrated public can be led to vent its fury at being shortchanged by the "American Dream." He is especially skilled at recruiting alienated youngsters who, lost and without identity, find that elusive self-image in attacking others for some dimly articulated fascistic cause such as White Aryan Supremacy.

But there are other factors afoot in today's America that make the earth even more fertile for hate. Deep in the current "family values" debate, as orchestrated by the conservative right in the recent GOP Convention, is the battlefield of true-believers versus non-believers. There is much mischief in this polarization for it sets side against side in the extreme, leaving no room for shades of gray. "You are either a true believer in what we promote or you are the enemy" is what these purveyors of absolutism seem to be saying, and if you are the enemy, then you are to be pursued and purged.

A hidden agenda

The first lesson my son, Joe, is learning as he begins junior high school is a new vocabulary word: ambivalence.

My dictionary defines it as "simultaneous and contradictory attitudes or feelings ... toward an object, person or action." And, I don't believe I've ever seen anyone so simultaneously contradictory about anything as Joe has been about entering this new phase of his educational life. He loves being out of elementary school, but he hates being considered one of the "7th-grade babies." He's excited about moving from class to class and having different teachers, but he's worried about what's going to happen now that he won't have one teacher looking out for him all year. He can't wait to try out for the school basketball team, but he doesn't like to think about the possibility of being cut. He's anxious to meet new friends, and anxious about encountering new bullies. See what I mean? Ambivalent.

His father, on the other hand, feels no such confusing contradictions about Joe entering junior high. I'm as pleased as I can be about the ups and downs Joe will inevitably experience during the next three years, mostly because I know he is ready for both sets of experiences - and because I know it's time. Time for him to learn a few more lessons through success - and failure. Time for him to broaden his vision of the world around him. Time for him to take these significantly uncertain steps from childhood to young adulthood.

While I realize that I can't control his junior high journey, much less his choice of ultimate destinations, I have to confess to a hidden agenda as I look at his new class schedule. Beyond the theories and rules and facts he will be taught, there are a number of important values I hope he picks up in each class - even if it's only subconsciously.

For example, I hope his math studies help him learn that life is still filled with absolutes. Two plus two always equals four. So does ten minus six. In a world that sometimes seems to be dominated by temporary truths and relative reality, I hope he can find comfort in knowing that some things will always be true. No matter what.

My hidden agenda for his English class has to do with the value of communication. Sometime during the year, I hope he experiences the incredible feeling that comes to every communicator when a deeply

Hatred strikes nearby

When Republican National Chairman Richard Bond says of his party and its dogma "We are America, the other people (Democrats, etc.) are not America" he stands on the brink of loosing the dogs of war upon those who disagree with the right wing's anti-abortion, anti-gay, anti feminist and anti-dissent platform. Thus, attacks on those not totally within their version of "mainstream" are tacitly approved and a nation already in the throes of self-doubt and frustration can be expected to increase its number of active haters and their subsequent crimes.

America has always had its ethnic and religious hatreds. As waves of national immigrations poured onto our shores in the late 1800s and early years of this century, each new group was reviled both by longtime Americans and by recent immigrant groups who had themselves been the prior target. "No Irish Need Apply" was once one of the slogans of America as Irish immigrants flooded our borders seeking the jobs held by other ethnic groups who had previously arrived.

Nevertheless, I remember a time when, at least vocally, Americans praised their nation's diversity. Maybe it took World War II, when Americans of many (not all, even then) ethnic, religious, and national groups stood together against a common enemy. But now, apparently, according to Bond, anyone who is not a member of his party's America is "not American" and therefore someone to be distrusted and squelched - in short, the enemy!

The hate-filled graffiti on the synagogue has been removed with help from many non-Jews who well understand that an attack on one minority is an attack on all. But the climate of hate and suspicion is with us and the words of the poet John Donne ring clear. "Ask not for whom the bell tolls - it tolls for thee."

We must fiercely defend each other, lest the day eventually arrives when the haters come for us.

by Joseph Walker

felt message is received, understood and appreciated by its intended audience. And, I hope he decides right then to make clear, concise communication a top priority - especially with regards to his most important personal relationships.

Joe is also taking a Spanish class, which I hope teaches him something about diversity and how people can use different words and still mean the same thing. And maybe if he learns even a little of another language, he'll be less fearful of people from other cultures and, perhaps, less inclined toward prejudice.

If my son is anything like his old man, gym class has the potential to be fairly traumatic. That's why I hope he learns that he isn't really competing against the shorter, faster guys in the sprint races and the lighter, more flexible guys in the rope climb. His only real competition - in gym and in life - is with himself. If he can learn the value of working hard to improve personal performance, he will be successful - no matter what he does in comparison to anyone else.

There are other classes and other hidden agendas. Science can provide marvelous perspective as he learns of the incredibly complex sequence of events and circumstances that make our existence possible. History is a rich source of context as he tries to make some sense of the world around him and how it relates to his life. And, if I'm really lucky, his keyboarding class (we used to call it typing) will prompt him to think fondly of his dear old dad once or twice, if only to mutter a newly appreciative, "Holy cow, I can't believe Dad sits around and does this stuff all day, every day!"

Yeah, that's right - there's room for a little martyrdom on my hidden agenda.

Of course, I realize that some of these lessons will come to Joe the same way they came to me: painfully. I don't relish the thought, but I understand that some of the most meaningful learning any of us ever does comes in the midst of trial and difficulty. And deep down inside, I think Joe understands that, too. That's probably why we're both looking forward to the next few years of junior high. Almost as much as we're dreading them.

Ge, I wonder if ambivalence is hereditary?

From Where I Sit

A hot time in paradise
by Frank Andrews

About a month ago, we delivered our good friends, Ben and Alice, to the San Diego airport before 6 a.m. for their long flight to Buffalo, New York. Boy, they must have wanted to get out of town in a hurry to depart that early! Of course, the airport complex was jammed with traffic from other people trying to get out of town as soon as possible. Was it a premonition of an upcoming earthquake, tidal wave, or some other disaster? I wished that I could have talked to my faithful dog, Calli, as animals are supposed to foresee disasters a little before humans. She must have been in one of her moods because she just ignored me. A short time later, our friends, John, Mary, and son Brian, left for a stay in Hawaii. Did they all know something that I didn't?

Ben and Alice wrote back telling of the weather in the Buffalo area. Out of their 30 day visit, 25 of those days were cool with rain. John and Mary wrote of the most beautiful climate on the Islands, but you have to pay for it, they said. Back here, in the "Best Climate on Earth" area, we sweltered with soaring temperatures combined with record high humidity. I have lived in San Diego and suburbs for over 30 years and I cannot remember such uncomfortable days and nights. How did my friends and all the others know to get out of town for a while?

I can remember the climate in Minnesota where I spent the bigger part of my life. I just didn't know any better than to stay there and sweat it out. Air conditioning had not been invented yet and the old "swamp coolers" weren't very efficient because of the high humidity from the "Land of 10,000 Lakes." I can remember many a night taking my blanket out to the front lawn for some relief from the hot, muggy night only to be drained of all my blood by "Olympic-sized" mosquitoes. I won't even mention the winters back then, but a little of that cold talk might feel good about now. We just thought the whole country had similar climate - until I discovered wonderful San Diego (the old San Diego of yesteryear, that is).

We used to be able to take a lunch and go to the beach for some fun and cooler breezes, but, of late, the beaches aren't much cooler than our inland (at least we could have lunch). Have you noticed the evening local weather maps? The whole country has rain and cool weather except our southwest corner which usually has at least one 100 degrees plunked down near us.

Oh to have been at the Republican Convention in the Houston Astro Dome! Do you think the air conditioners in that huge plastic house could have offset the tons of "hot air" given off by the politicians?

Unless our "Best Climate on Earth" has been altered by the nuclear bomb tests, the cutting down of the "Rain Forests," the use of too many aerosol spray cans, leaky auto air-conditioners or El Niño, I think I'll thank God and stick it out here in San Diego.

Thompson wins Cox Cable award for excellence

Heidi Thompson of Lemon Grove, a material auditor for Cox Cable San Diego, Inc., has been honored with the company's Award of Excellence for the second quarter of 1992.

Established in 1984, the Award of Excellence is a quarterly honor bestowed upon Cox Cable employees who have demonstrated exceptional performance to the company, a fellow employee or a particular task.

"Sometimes it takes one person to pull things together-to serve as the backbone of a department or organization," said Jack Connolly, rebuild project manager for Cox Cable. "Despite her very demanding work load, Heidi has always maintained a great sense of humor, as well as a great sense of responsibility and dedication to her job."

Thompson has over eight years service with Cox Cable and is currently responsible for tracking and recording the materials required for the company's system upgrade project. She also has experience in the areas of system development, customer service and direct sales, and has been honored with numerous "Employee of the month" and "Employee of the Quarter" awards.

A resident of East County for over six years, Thompson currently resides in Lemon Grove with her husband, Bill, and their two children, Stephanie and Wesley.

Mayor and City Manager speak to Chamber of Commerce

No, that's not the mayor, that's our esteemed publisher, Pete Kaufman, nodding off (well, OK- sawing logs) during the Chamber luncheon. Assigned to cover the mayor's talk, Kaufman took camera in hand and made it to the luncheon even though he had worked through the night Wednesday night to get last week's issue of the Review to the printer on Thursday morning.

He claims he heard the mayor explaining that the Brown Act precluded the other councilmembers from taking part in the discussion, and some grumbling from Councilmembers Burns and Lake, and the next thing he remembers, the luncheon was over.

Dr. Burns and Pete Smith managed to turn the tide on Kaufman by using his dormant camera and catching him hard at work. Some wise guy commented that it looked like Kaufman had learned well the tricks of the trade from previous publisher Max Goodwin. Hopefully, there will be a report on the talk in the next Chamber newsletter!

'The Fox' to open at the Grove Playhouse

Doug Reger, Susan Stratton and Betty Matthews in "The Fox."

The Octad-One Productions presentation of "The Fox," by Allen Miller, will open September 3 at the Grove Playhouse, Market Place at the Grove, Suite 355A, (lower level next to Pic-n-Save).

"The Fox," based on the short novel by D.H. Lawrence, is about two women in their 30s who, in 1914, are trying to make a life alone on an isolated farm in England. Things are not going too well until a young, mysterious and dynamic soldier enters searching for his grandfather. He proves to be such an engaging fellow that he is invited to stay. Then the situation starts to take on a sinister quality.

Directed by Martin Gerrish, the cast includes Betty Matthews, Doug Reger and Susan Stratton.

The running dates are Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at 8p.m. Sept. 3, 4, 5, 10, 11, 12, 17, 18, 19, 24, 25, 26, and Oct. 1, 2, and 3 and Sunday matinees at 2 p.m. Sept. 6, 13, 20, 27 and closing Oct. 4.

Ticket prices are $10 for adults, $9 for seniors, students and military. Groups of 20 or more - $8. Full house (60) - $7. For reservations call 466-3987 or 583-2418.

In the Service

Navy Seaman William L. Reed, whose wife, Sara, is the daughter of Dale Conger-Cross of Lemon Grove, recently participated in the decommissioning ceremony of the frigate USS Robert E. Peary, homeported at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

The ship, named for Admiral Robert E. Peary, the first explorer to reach the North Pole, was the 3rd U.S. Naval ship to bear his name. It joined the fleet in Sept. 1972 and completed twelve deployments to the South Pacific, Indian Ocean, Western Pacific and Persian Gulf.

The ship has also received numerous awards, including six Battle Efficiency awards, the Navy Expeditionary Medal, the National Defense Medal, the Southwest Asian Service Medal, the Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal and the Humanitarian Service Medal.

The decommissioning comes at a time when the Navy-Marine Corps Team has changed course and is carefully restructuring to a smaller naval expeditionary force that will stress quality and readiness over size to maintain future peace and stability.

The 1990 graduate of Colonel Richardson High School joined the Navy in Sept. 1990.

Navy Seaman Recruit Jeffrey M. Bravo, son of Flotilde M. Bravo of Lemon Grove, recently completed basic training at Recruit Training Command, San Diego.

He joined the Navy in May 1992.
